HUMANITARIAN ASSISTANCE

When disaster strikes, Plan International mobilizes people and resources quickly, to ensure the immediate and long-term needs of affected children and their families are met. From providing urgent relief to running recovery projects, it works to protect the rights of children and young people at every stage of our emergency response. Preparation can make all the difference when the worst happens.

Plan International works with children, their families and communities to identify disaster risks and strengthen their resilience. It ensures that children have a significant voice in disaster response decisions. Plan International also works with various partners to help prevent future emergencies and reduce their impact. In all of this, child protection is paramount. The organization prioritizes providing children with safe spaces, education and emotional support as part of our immediate disaster response.
